COMPLETE SCHOOL BUILDING CONTRACT

Local Board Effects Final Agreements with Architects

The contract between the city
board of education and the architectural firm of Garber & Woodard of Cincinnati was made a matter of record at the board meeting last night when written agreements were signed by the president of the board and a representative of the firm. The contract has been previously been delayed until a clause relative to superiority of construction was made acceptable to the board.

Work on plans for two of the additional schools has been temporarily halted until the board of education has approved the final plans. The board of education has been considering the plans for some time and has been unable to reach a decision.

BUICK NEAR DEATH

Automobile Manufacturer Being Treated for Cancer

DETROIT, March 5.—David Buick, founder of the Buick Motor Car Co.,
and whose signature appears on the gleaming radiators of more than 2,000,000 automobiles throughout the world, was believed dying of cancer in a hospital here today, where he has been confined for two weeks.
Buick has lived for years in obscurity and comparative poverty.
He lost his holdings in the mammoth automobile concern before they brought wealth. Then, emaciated and gray-haired, the aged motor car pioneer has been unable to afford an automobile.

SHOWS PATHWAY

Steps To Full Salvation Outlined In Revival Sermon

In his revival sermon last night the Rev. J. H. Hadenburg, pastor of the Colored Evangelical church here, pointed out that there are six experiences in his text for the sermon I Thes. 5:22-24.

The first is reconciliation to God. When we are sinners and have transgressed God's law we must be reconciled to him. This is the first step in the pathway to full salvation.

The second step is the forgiveness of sins. We must confess our sins and receive forgiveness. This is the second step in the pathway to full salvation.

MOTHERS now learn value of MAGNESIA

The most helpful in promoting babies and children healthy and happy every mother should know about Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

This harmless, almost tasteless preparation is most effective in relieving those symptoms of indigestion and children generally caused by souring food in the little digestive tract, such as: sour belching, frequent vomiting, feverishness, colic, a mild laxative it acts gently but certainly to open the little bowels in constipation, colds, children's diseases.

A teaspoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia does the work of half a pint of lime water in relieving a sick baby for infant colic, and preventing hard stools. Its many uses for mother and child are fully explained in the booklet, "Laxative for Infants and Children," which you will find in every bottle of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

In England, sure to get genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It is the only one that has been analyzed and found to be pure. It is the only one that has been analyzed and found to be pure. It is the only one that has been analyzed and found to be pure.

Why No More Water Power.

It is unfortunate that only a small proportion of the power which might be derived from the rivers and streams of the United States is being utilized gainfully. It is still more unfortunate that the places in which much of this power may be harnessed are so located that it is improbable that it will be developed for many years to come. The trouble is two-fold; the sites for power development are wrongly placed for the gainful utilization from them and our domain is too widespread to permit of the carrying of the power to the localities where it might be used profitably.

At the time eighty-five per cent. of the country's possible water power became subject to government control under the federal act of 1920, it was estimated that $6,000,000 horsepower was available from our streams, yet not more than 12,000,000 horsepower has been developed.

If it were possible to develop power and transmit it in the form of electricity over wires or cables to great distances, the problem of utilizing it would be comparatively easy. While it is true that the original cost of a plant to convert water power into electric power is greater than the original cost of a steam plant for like purpose, the cost of operation is far less, and, all other things even, the water plant ultimately would prove the more profitable.

But the trouble is that electricity has the knack of disappearing. We once heard an electrical expert testify in court to the effect that a telegraph message could be knocked off a wire with a pole. We do not know as to the worth of his contention, but if he spoke within the bounds of fact, some force of nature may knock electricity off a wire. Any way, an electric current will become dissipated and disappear. And this trend precludes its transmission over wires for long distances. If it were possible to develop the power in populous centers where it could be used profitably, it is hardly probable that any conceivable portion of our potential water power would be permitted to escape utilization, but the locations of possible power sites are usually in out-of-the-way places, which would make the use of the power at them less profitable than steam-developed electric power, the transportation costs for the handling of the materials and finished products being greater than the cost and freight charges on coal or oil.

A Splendid Tribute.

That was a splendid tribute paid from the floor of the lower house of congress to the outgoing president, Monday, by Majority Leader John Q. Tamm in which he held that Mr. Coolidge had had the confidence of congress to an extent not enjoyed by any other president in the last two decades or more.

Punctuating out that Mr. McKinley exerted influence on congress as a result of friendships made while a member of that branch of the government; that Mr. Roosevelt used "the big stick," the press and the popularity he enjoyed throughout the land "to help work his will," that the full cooperation of congress was not attained by Taft, "the most amiable of men," that it was through "the wholesome fear of him in his own party" that Wilson ruled, and that Harding did not live sufficiently long to permit a thorough test of his policy in dealing with congress, Mr. Tamm said:

"President Coolidge's relationship with congress has been different from that of all his predecessors. Quite often disagreeing with congress on matters of legislation, there never developed any rancor or bitterness over the differences. He has impressed every one with the feeling that he acts at all times conscientiously, without the slightest influence from fear or favor, and with an eye single to the general good as he sees it.

"He seems to have proceeded upon the theory that others will do their duty in the same spirit, and, therefore, has not attempted unduly to sway others toward his own point of view.

"The point I now rise to make and to emphasize is that, during the entire period of the Coolidge administration, the president has used the power and influence of his great office effectively in the advancement of wise legislation, as well as in opposition to unwise, unnecessary and expensive legislation.

"President Coolidge has earned and retained the highest personal regard of the individual members of congress.

"The result is that although the president at times has not been found in agreement with congress, as shown by his vetoes, I recall no period during my long service in the house when there has been such universal confidence among its members in the soundness, patriotism, good faith, and good judgment of the chief executive as in the period now drawing to a close.

"The people of the United States are most fortunate in having as their president at this period in our history a man of the soundness, firmness, high purpose, and practical common sense of President Coolidge. It is not eulogy, but in my judgment only a plain statement of fact."

Getting right down to the heart of the matter, was there not good reason for the success of Mr. Coolidge in welding great influence over congress? Did he not show wisdom in following the route he did? Was not the psychology of his course excellent? He was careful not to combat congress to such an extent as to arouse resentment in any issue and hence had no resentment to overcome when a succeeding issue developed. If, for any reason, he felt that a bill submitted for his signature was unimpaired, unimpaired or contrary to the course of wisdom, he vetoed it, and usually took the public into his confidence by stating why he pursued the course he did.

Long in politics, Mr. Coolidge knew that the general tendency of the public is to be more friendly to the executive branch of the government than to the legislative, and he made plain his position, trusting that it would be given public support. He as much as said to congress: "You are wrong in this matter; your course is not the proper one. I say this to you; now proceed as you see fit."

And Mr. Coolidge had been sufficiently long in public life to be aware of another fact. He knew that legislative bodies, elected by the direct vote of the people, whether such bodies are municipal, state or national, are the most sensitive to public opinion of any bodies exist. He knew that the members of such bodies are always mindful of how any action taken by them may be received by their constituents. He knew that a morally courageous legislator in this regard is a rarity, and he utilized that knowledge to the utmost. He knew that, having stated his position, the silence he subsequently maintained on the subject would for outweigh with the public any legislative frolics which might be uttered in contravention of his position and, more than that, he knew that members of congress also knew it.

No doubt Mr. Coolidge left the presidency with the high esteem of congress. Congress could not do other than esteem one who was able to influence it as he did. Congress simply had to admit the ability of one who, using his tactfulness as his most effective weapon, had it kept from the start—at least from the time of his election to the presidency.

Why Foods React Unpleasantly.

BY ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

We hear a lot these days about "the anaphylactic effects of foreign proteins." Don't be scared by these ponderous words. They can be explained in the language of the natives. You are a twentieth century person and want to know something about such things.

A solution containing a protein of some sort may be injected into the blood stream or the tissues of the body. Perhaps it may be an unusual substance, something foreign to the normal and usual constituents of the body. One example of what I mean by such a "protein" is the white of an egg.

You are familiar with the fact that a serum has been found that protects against typhoid fever. Ordinarily, the several infections produce very little painful or disturbing reactions. They result in "phagocytosis," or protection against typhoid fever.

Such serums are really proteins, "foreign proteins." Most persons react favorably to them. Unfortunately, however, in rare cases, instead of being "phagocytotic," or protective against the disease, they make the condition worse. Instead of helping, they do exactly the opposite. This is what is meant by an anaphylactic attack.

The first dose may be received kindly, but after that the body reacts the reception of the strange proteins. Instead of good effect, harmful symptoms are observed. Damage has been done and an unpleasant condition results.

There has been produced a state of "anaphylaxis." There is shock to the system. Some foods act this way in certain persons. It is indeed true that "what is one person's food is another person's poison."

Since we have come so far into this subject, it would seem wise to complete the discussion. In this connection let us consider asthma.

Not only certain germs, but also the consumption of certain foods, and the breathing of the emanations from animals, may cause an attack of asthma. Something is given off from the horse, dog, cat, or the hair of the rabbit, that may cause a sensitive person to have an attack of asthma.

But there are other ways of getting asthma. Egg, wheat, oats, milk, pork, shell fish, or some other familiar food, may bring on the painful symptoms of asthma.

Hay fever and certain skin conditions, called hives or eczema, may have symptoms of anaphylaxis. There is a failure of the system to tolerate the offending food, or the pollen of flowers, or animal emanations, or whatever it is that is at fault.

I have read of a man who was so sensitive to egg albumen—the white of egg—that he could eat the most of a rooster, but couldn't eat that of a hen. That is a remarkable example of real anaphylaxis.

Hereditary enters into the causation of anaphylaxis. It is not uncommon for several members of the same family to have hay fever, asthma and certain unpleasant reactions to certain foods. The cells of the body of the several members of one family possess this peculiar sensitiveness to a given protein.

There, that is a long lesson about a puzzling and uncomfortable condition, anaphylaxis. Fortunately, it is rarely met.

Prophylaxis is a blessing and we strive to find prophylactic or protective measures for the prevention of human ailments. But also the research men are seeking to solve the mysteries and dangers of the opposite state.

Editorial Opinion.

LIBERTY BONDS BELOW PAR.

States, cities, counties, school districts, other local areas, borrowed money at such a rate during 1928 that their outstanding securities that are wholly exempt from taxation increased by the great sum of $1,600,000,000.

Were that an exceptional year, several problems arising from this rapid increase in crushing debt burdens might be left to time for solution. However, it was not an exceptional year. The total public debt of this character now amounts to $10,000,000,000, only a little less than the total federal debt at the close of the war, and while of course war borrowings have ceased and repayment begun, all signs seem to indicate that the peace borrowings will continue at the same or perhaps at even an increased rate as compared with the recent past.

One problem results from the effect on federal securities themselves. The income from local bonds is exempt from all federal taxes, locally exempt from local taxes in most states and virtually exempt also in practice in other states. Federal securities are likewise exempt from the so-called "normal" federal income tax, but must pay the federal surtax when total income reaches the prescribed figure.

To this cause—the net yield from local being greater than that from federal bonds—is attributed, in part, the gradual decline in the market price of the latter. Some of the so-called "Liberty" series of government bonds bearing 4½ per cent. were nearly one dollar below par last week and a loss of three dollars per hundred would have been incurred in the sale of 3½ and other refunding bonds accepted at par a few months ago. If sold in recent days. The high rate of bank interest has an important influence of course, but the anomaly has been seen of other bonds of about the same interest rate selling on a level with government bonds or even a trifle higher.

In a look ahead to the time when the government must again engage in refunding on a large scale, the condition is rather serious, for even if the money market changes, this inequality in taxation would still have force. Secretary Mellon's basic remedy is a constitutional amendment authorizing federal taxes on state and other local securities. However, the most optimistic treasury official can scarcely picture states ratifying an amendment permitting Washington to levy taxes on their own road and other bonds.

The only alternative in Mr. Mellon's view is for congress to exempt government bonds from the surtax. He believes the chance would increase the number of owners of government bonds, one so widely held. That number is now rapidly diminishing and the bonds are accumulating in the hands of comparatively a few, in consequence in part of the tax disparity.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

REFERENDUM ON WAR.

Following up the Kellor post against war, Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr., has introduced a resolution into the congress the effect of which would be to require a referendum to be submitted to the people before any war could be waged save in defense of the United States. Such proposals as this are usually condemned on two distinct counts. By those of a pacific inclination, they are condemned as too weak, allowing anything to be put over on the people as "defense war." By those of a jingoistic slant, they are condemned as a danger to the policy of self-defense and protection of national interests.

However, the proposal of Mr. Fish is more properly to be criticized on a totally different basis. Delving back into the mysteries of how wars start, we find that a period must always be allowed, before any major war, in which to prepare the minds of masses of people for any governmental action. A period for a referendum, while naturally founded on the theory that people are a wiser as opposed to war, is nevertheless apt to give an excellent opening for such a period of propaganda. Any one who considers the pitch to which people are aroused, emotionally, by a presidential election, will not fail to realize that a referendum on war merely would give the jingoists their opportunity to arouse hatreds and fears where none need exist for any sound reason. No, the way to peace is more nearly through the election of honest and far-sighted men to public office—men who realize at the outset that war is folly, and will shape policies in such fashion as to avoid hostilities.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

New York Day by Day.

BY O. O. MONTAGUE.

New York, March 5.—There is nothing, it seems, to be done about the curious and not entirely popular custom of theatrical producers in hanging out notices of reviews and sweetening them up as sugar lumps. Unethically, it is not arguable.

Recently the gifted Percy Hammond wrote: "The play is a show, even if it isn't a very good show and I promise a kick if you are not fastidious about your kicks." Imagine the surprise that was his next day to be quoted in leading ads. "I promise you a kick."

The late Alan Dale many years ago wrote of a shoddy play. "There never was a show like it. It is terrible." The next night most of this burlesque is repeated by fair-dealing showmen. He realizes it curtails extravagant economies by critics and that frequent exposure makes the theater goer glib of the deserved puff.

While the so-called "reader interest" in dramatic reviews grows, its power to make or break a show dwindles, it would seem. The motivating power in the theatrical business today is the approval of the agencies selling tickets. Theater goesers accept their advice. And they hold all good seats.

The "word of mouth" advertising is also a big factor. Even those who do not read reviews, learn of a success quickly. New York is the theatrical capital and gossip about it is important conversation. A real hit show can not be smothered save by the agencies.

Incidentally it strikes me the farthest north in dramatic blurring for the current season was in an enormous sign which read: "Mayor Walker arrived to see our play on time."

On an invitation to attend a stag dinner a complete list of guests was printed. And there was this thoughtful consideration in bold type: "In accepting, kindly indicate—in confidence—which of the named gentlemen you wish to sit farthest from."

In a large bank, with many branches, applicants for positions must undergo a thorough medical inspection. They are given psychiatric, psycho-analytic and other tests—including doubtless the balneostatic—and photographed in six different poses. A young man, successfully passing, telephoned his girl friend: "I landed a $20 a week job and they don't even suspect I have dandruff."

Several young millionaires occupy inconspicuous posts in large Manhattan banks. Their families are heavy stockholders and the dignity of the jobs appeals. It is fair to record many youthful scions have made good. A big change is noticeable among the youthful rich in the past few years. The glided young rake of the gaming table, stage droid and such has gone the way of the outstiff leech. In these days he is likely married and domesticated at twenty-five. But not always.

A bad end was predicted for the richest boy in our town because he cut through a funeral procession one day on a high bicycle. That stamped him, as grandmothers used to say, as "wild as a pigeon." But he became a fine citizen and told me years after the bicycle episode was merely because he could not stop "the darn thing."

A group of newspapermen were discussing a columnist who after twenty years of writing a daily column went into another business and in less than a week was completely crazy. If he had kept on writing a column no one would have noticed it. Copyright, 1929, by the McNaught Syndicate, Inc.

BY GARRETT P. SERVICE.

There is an exciting love chase now afoot in the sky. I speak of love as it may be supposed to manifest itself among the planetary deities. The chief actor, or actress, naturally, is Venus, and I regret to say that Newton's unsympathetic law of gravitation dooms her heart to be broken once more.

The thing began to attract attention among the spheres last December, when Venus, emerging from her periodical tangle with the god of day, commenced brightening herself up in the western heavens after sunset. Jupiter, having usual jocular Mars, was lording it after Aries, the Ram, fashion in the high sky with Aries, the Ram. Then Venus, coming up the western slope, and caught sight of him on his lofty throne, began to quicken her pace. But, notwithstanding his reputation in his old Olympus, standing his reputation as fast as he could. But Jove had not as fast as well as a male; he is always a handsome man, and she began to much ascend behind her chase. But if she couldn't better her pace, at least it was still a adorn herself wonderfully until she attracted universal attention, even from the sometimes rather dull-eyed inhabitants of the earth. Her lamp of love flamed above the sunset in the closing February evenings with a light of irresistible fascination. People began to revive the legend of "Edison's star," though some may now have thought that it might be Lindbergh's.

At the opening of the present month she was still gaining, and growing brighter, too. On the 1st of March she had diminished the separation to only about a dozen degrees. Everybody then noticed the drawing together of those two remarkable lights in the sky, and not a few took the trouble to learn that the brightest one was the twin sister of the earth, while the other was the mightiest of the planets, equal in mass to all the rest together.

The approach will be still closer, and the sight will increase the beauty. On March 15 Venus will attain her greatest brightness—a splendor as if a hole had been pierced in the dome of the sky to let through the supernatural radiance of the higher heavens. By that time she will be only seven and a half degrees behind Jupiter in right ascension. She will advance into Aries whilst he retreats toward Taurus. But about the 20th, when the distance will have diminished to six and a half degrees, the chase will be over and the glorious queen of love will confess her failure while the great lord of her desire stalks on toward in the zodiac. For several days, however, as with an effort of despair, she will all but keep pace with him. But at last swinging rapidly in between the earth and the sun, she will be swallowed up in the morning splendor, only to re-emerge in the endless wondrous sky, there to resume her endless wooings which can have no success as long as the law of gravitation holds the solar system in tact.—Copyright, 1929, International Feature Service, Inc.

The Way of the World.

BY GROVE PATTERSON.

Fanatics may be more dangerous than criminals. Their distorted beliefs, flowing out of an under-nourished, over-wrought mind, affect thousands. They inspire terror. They provoke fear of a monster whom they called God. Fanatics add mental misery to the world. "Realists" of this type are a danger to institutions of reform or everlasting silence.

Don't underestimate the power of words. They may, on occasion, be as important as deeds. Lincoln at Gettysburg said that men would not long remember what was said there, but they would always remember what men did there. And now what men did there is remembered because of what Lincoln said there.

There is some fun in losing your temper, losing yourself up, getting something out of your system. But there is a lot more satisfaction in keeping calm, holding your temper, getting finally what you want, and realizing comfortably that you haven't made a fool of yourself.

Veblen, great authority on sociology and the ways of human society, exposed a fallacy of modern business. The idea of almost every manufacturer is first of all to do more business than he did last year. Not many business men ask whether there is real need for greater production than last year. Not many think through the effect on mankind of more and more business. There is thought given to the quality of goods, but more to the quantity. The whole theory of business seems to be the theory of greater and greater production. There may or may not be a legitimate reason for doing more business this year than last.

It is good for any of us now and then to go through the humiliating experience of being "set right." We little by little build up a theory of our own importance. There is danger that our convictions in this regard will be largely reflected in our actions. Then somebody comes along who isn't a bit impressed with us and let's us know it. We are humiliated, but it is a wholesome experience. It puts us more nearly where we belong, takes the conceit out of us, and convinces us again that it takes a long time to produce true value.

MANHATTAN COAL

REG. U. S. PAT. OFFICE

YOU ask us for coal, when what you are really after is HEAT. So HEAT is what we sell you—the most heat per dollar for what you pay!

And we don't ask you to pay more than you'd pay for just ordinary coal. There's no penalty for you in letting us make you our warm friends for life!

This coal makes few ashes, little soot, and no clunkers. It holds fire well, and just pours out the heat. It comes clean, and burns clean. It's low priced—and the best buy in coal that we know of. Give us the word!
